FROM THE DIRECTOR

Looking back of the five years of my stint as Director IIPA, I derive a deep sense of fulfilment. I am glad to have contributed my bit towards the consolidation and progress of this great Institution. A powerful shared vision has a profound effect on the quality of performance of an organisation. We become contributory part of a greater whole, we can live, work, learn, educate and leave powerful legacies together. I deem it an honour to have shared the vision and legacy of the eminent people who have been associated with the Institute. The Annual Report for the year 2001-2002 records the fruits of our collective endeavour, also detailing some individual contributions.

It has been another year of continued effort towards achievements and excellence in various activities undertaken by the Institute. As expected of us, we remained proactive and perceptive of the developments in the areas that fall within the ambit of our functioning. This was amply reflected in the seven research studies and four consultancy assignments completed in the year. Eleven consultancy projects are in various stages of completion. The training programmes continued to maintain the high standards and usefulness in capacity building and managerial innovations. The prestigious Advanced Professional Programme in Public Administration successfully completed its twentyseventh run and so were the third and fourth batches of P.S. M.B.A. being delivered in collaboration with the University of Birmingham. The post-Graduate Professional Programme in Information Technology and Management acquired greater strength. New core competencies are being developed to face the challenges of the fast changing world around us.

The comfortable financial position enabled us to further upgrade the facilities and infrastructure at the Institute. Internal facelift which was due for quite sometime was undertaken during the year and the long standing demand from faculty members and senior administrative staff for individual personal computers was met to everybody's satisfaction. We could also manage to augment the financial assistance and research grants to the regional and local branches. At the end of the year the value of the corpus of Infrastructure Development Fund exceeds Rs. 1.5 crore.

As the pages of this Annual Report will unfold before you, the year 2001-2002 has been a rewarding and exciting year. The list of silent and manifest achievements is a result of the unstinted patronage and support from various quarters. We convey our gratitude to our patron Hon'ble President of India Dr. K.R. Narayanan and to the Hon'ble Vice-President of India Shri Krishan Kant for their continued blessings. No words of gratitude can suffice to acknowledge the support, guidance and encouragement that we received from the Hon'ble Chairman Shri S.B. Chavan and members of the Executive Council. Office bearers and members of our local and regional branches are a great source of strength in carrying out our mandated role. I profusely thank each one of them for their valuable contribution.

Various ministries and departments of the government strongly supported us in our task. I specially thank the Department of Personnel and Training, Ministry of Finance, Ministry of Urban Development, Ministry of Agriculture, Ministry of Home Affairs and the Planning Commission. The Institute looks forward to their continued support in the days and years to come.

I wish I had the eloquence to thank my colleagues at the IIPA for their invaluable support all these five years that I have been here. They deserve the credit for all that has been achieved.

There are good times and there are not so good times. We need not allow ourselves to be weighed down by the vicissitudes of the present but remain focused on the possibilities of the future. Being anchored in reality and taking small steps-one at a time-leads us towards realisation of our goals. The vision of future has sustained and motivated my efforts at IIPA. I will cherish this vision with a deep sense of gratitude towards all those who are associated with this great Institute.

I wish the Institute and my successor Dr. P.L. Sanjeev Reddy a very bright future.

• A. SIGNIFICANT EVENTS •

A.1 New Director Joins

On Completion of his term, Shri M.C. Gupta, Director, IIPA laid down his office w.e.f. 31.3.2002 and Dr. P.L. Sanjeev Reddy, former Secretary, Department of Company Affairs, Ministry of Law, Justice and Company Affairs, succeeded him as Director w.e.f. April 1, 2002. His bio-data is annexed as Annexure IV-A.

A.2 Inauguration of Twenty-seventh APPPA

The Institute's prestigious nine-month Advanced Professional Programme in Public Administration — twenty-seventh in the series, sponsored by Ministry of Personnel, Public Grievances and Pension was inaugurated on July 3, 2001 by Shri Yashwant Sinha, Union Minister for Finance. In his inaugural address he observed that the requisite measures in the second generation reforms are slower and more controversial because practically all of them require legislative, not administrative decisions as the first generation reforms did. He observed that first phase of reforms was easier as administrative decrees were enough to keep things moving, but the second phase is bound to take more time as legislative changes have to be brought in. Further, the efforts to bring in economic reforms — be it amendments in labour laws, the Insurance Regulatory Development Authority Bill or lowering of equity in public sector banks — have been mired in controversy without knowing the facts behind the moves.

He also stated that economic forces have been unleashing pressure globally which is beyond control, so the only option left is to efficiently manage its impact on the country. With globalisation becoming the order of the day, both complexities and challenges posed by it are becoming more onerous and contrary to oft-repeated propaganda it is not multinational companies but the competitors from developing countries that are posing challenge to Indian entrepreneurs.

Shri Sinha rebutted the Opposition's claim that the government is sacrificing sovereignty to multilateral bodies like WTO, IMF and World Bank. According to him, national sovereignty is not the kind of flower that will wilt due to some policy changes. He mentioned that country has no problems with the IMF and it is not the borrower but its founder member. He further mentioned that, the World Bank gives funds for development projects on the basis of their viability and does not dictate terms on the country's policies. Talking about the declining growth rate, Shri Sinha apprised that the Central Statistical Organisation has put the tentative figure at 5.2 per cent as against the targeted six per cent. This is basically because of the increased international oil prices and decline in food production.

He hoped that the training programme would help the participants in capacity building for better performance, in developing capability for effective leadership, and to take up higher administrative responsibility with greater confidence.

Earlier, in his welcome address, Shri M.C. Gupta, Director of IIPA, highlighted IIPA's role in training, research, consultancy and dissemination of information on public administration.

Prof. P.K. Chaubey, Programme Director of APPPA, delineated the course-content and methodology of the present programme.

A.3 Launch of the Publication "Governance and Poverty: Towards More Effective Public Service Delivery"

The Institute launched the publication titled "Governance and Poverty: Towards More Effective Public Service Delivery", which is a compilation of work undertaken by the participants of the one-year Public Service MBA degree programme (Special Indian Stream) of the University of Birmingham (UK) in Partnership with IIPA and the Civil Service College, Sunningdale.

A.4 Shri T.N. Chaturvedi on Important Assignments

Shri T.N. Chaturvedi, MP, and Chairman, Standing Committee of IIPA, was elected as India's Representative on the Executive Board of UNESCO at its General Conference held in Paris in October, 2001. Among the distinguished personalities who represented India earlier were Dr. S. Radhakrishnan, Dr. Zakir Husain, Mrs. Indira Gandhi, Mr. G. Parthasarthy, Mr. Ram Niwas Mirdha, and Mr. Muchkund Dubey. Shri Chaturvedi was also appointed as Vice-President, and Chairman Executive Council, Nehru Memorial Museum and Library Society which is headed by the Prime Minister Shri Atal Behari Vajpayee. He is also on the Executive Council of the National Book Trust.

A.5 Founder's Day and APPPA & PS MBA Convocation

IIPA organised a joint function to mark its Founder's Day and Convocation of its prestigious 27th Advanced Professional Programme in Public Administration (APPPA) and third Public Service MBA on March 23, 2002.

Dr. C. Rangarajan, Governor of Andhra Pradesh, addressed the joint function and delivered the Endowment Lecture on "India and the Global Challenges". In his address, he observed that the setting up of the IIPA in 1954 was a landmark in the evolution of the system of public administration in our country.

He observed that the functions of the government have changed over time and they are no longer limited to the traditional ones of maintenance of law and order, administration of justice and protecting the state against external aggression. According to him, governments have both a developmental and an administrative role to play.

Dr. Rangarajan mentioned that in any economic system, the State can play many roles— (i) as a producer of marketable goods and services, (ii) as a regulator of the system, and (iii) as a supplier of public goods or social goods like primary education and health. He also stated that government must perform well whatever it has set out to achieve and it should be efficient, responsive and credible.

He felt that vision, strategy and governance must go together and IIPA will play a major role in helping the governments at the Centre and at the states to achieve this convergence.

Dr. Rangarajan observed that the Indian economy during the period 1947-90 acquired a great degree of internal strength and resilience in terms of promoting a large and diversified industrial base, both in the public and private sectors, bringing about a turn-around in the long-standing stagnation of agriculture leading to achievement of near self-sufficiency in food, and creating a large reserve of skilled manpower. According to him, the thrust of the new economic policy is towards creating a more competitive environment in the economy to improve the productivity and efficiency of the system.

Dr. Rangarajan observed that there is a need to achieve improvement in the functioning of the various entities whether they are in the private or public sector by injecting an element of competition. He also mentioned that if the growth momentum is to be sustained, some areas need focussed attention. He observed that a comprehensive agricultural policy encompassing a higher level of public investment, a shift from subsidies to investment in terms of public expenditure, consolidation of holdings, a proactive programme to foster exports, intensified agricultural research to raise yields and evolving a better cropping pattern are required.

According to Dr. Rangarajan, massive investment needed to materialise, a definite, transparent and concrete policy framework should be put in place to focus on increased commercialisation of infrastructure services, appropriate legal, regulatory and administrative frameworks to support both foreign and domestic private sector involvement, and introducing new and innovative financial products for infrastructure funding.

He also observed that education and health must receive priority attention and the universal primary education is a goal yet to be achieved and that the most important question before the Government is how to ensure that the benefits of economic development percolate down to the lowest stratum of the society.

Dr. Rangarajan felt that the new millennium will be characterised by some fundamental changes in technology and will see greater integration of the economies. He further mentioned that in the new millennium, unlike the industrialised world which faces one major challenge of meeting the fast changing technological paradigm, we in India will face twin challenges – to keep up with the latest developments in technology, and how to enable the large mass of our population who even today do not use current technology to cope up with the new changes.

Talking about growing globalisation, Dr. Rangarajan underlined the need to evolve an appropriate framework, to wrest maximum benefits out of international trade and investment, which should include: (a) making explicit the list of demands that India would like to make on the multilateral trade system, (b) measures that rich countries should be required to undertake to enable developing countries to gain more from international trade, and (c) steps that India should take to realize the full potential from globalisation.

Dr. Rangarajan also mentioned that we must voice our concerns and in cooperation with other developing countries modify the international trading arrangements to take care of the special needs of such countries and at the same time identify and strengthen our comparative advantages.

And finally, he observed that we need to stress simultaneously economic development in the conventional sense of accelerating growth rate and social development in the sense of meeting the basic needs for everyone.

Shri S.B. Chavan, MP, Chairman of IIPA, in his presidential address, complimented the faculty and staff of IIPA for successfully conducting 27th APPPAs without any break. He observed that over the years the Institute has made the programme very relevant, educative and purposeful for senior and middle level officers of the country.

He expressed his happiness that the PSMBA programme, another programme of the Institute, has successfully completed three years which is an example of successful collaboration between IIPA and the University of Birmingham.

Shri Chavan observed that in the era of globalisation, it is necessary that our civil servants learn and benefit from international experiences in the field of public administration.

Shri Chavan mentioned that while APPPA has been responding to changes in the administrative environment, PSMBA was launched with the explicitly stated objective of equipping middle-level officers with knowledge, tools and skills required in the context of the rapidly changing role of the State and capacity building for poverty alleviation.

Shri Chavan observed that both APPPA and PSMBA programmes play an useful role in the re-designing of our administrative apparatus and hoped that the participants will make the best use of their respective training courses in their future assignments.

Earlier, in his welcome address, Shri M.C. Gupta, Director of IIPA, observed that long-term training of civil servants and their counterparts in defence forces has to be seen in the context of the emerging socio-political and socio-economic challenges.

Shri Gupta mentioned that APPPA, conceived and initiated more than a quarter century ago, has acquired a greater criticality today in the midst of ever-increasing challenges to governance; and the other programme—PSMBA—has added a new dimension to IIPA's capability and desire to prepare civil servants for a key role in ensuring effective governance.

• B. ACADEMIC ACTIVITIES •

B.1 RESEARCH AND CONSULTANCY STUDIES/PROJECTS

During the year, the Institute completed the following research studies and consultancy assignments.

B.1.1 RESEARCH STUDIES

(1) Training of Elected Panchayati Raj Representatives

Objectives

- The implications of the Constitution 73rd Amendment Act, specifically in relation to the tasks and responsibilities at various levels.
- Assessment of training needs.
- Training programmes for different levels, i.e., Zilla Parishad, Panchayat Samiti, Village Panchayat and District Planning Committee.
- Organisational Issues: Role of Union and state departments of rural development in policy, monitoring and evaluation of training programmes.
- Role of nodal organisation and the linkages between state level organisation and district level set-up.

Methodology

- To examine the awareness of Panchayat Raj elected representatives (at all levels) about their roles and responsibilities through field work.
- To identify the training needs in a scientific manner to devise training programmes on the basis of felt training needs and also pedagogy, used, etc.

Summary and Conclusions

The analysis of the panchayat raj training in both the phases (1959-70) and (1971-2001) had shown a large number of infirmities and weaknesses in these programmes. Since 1993, the task has become very daunting and formidable in terms of magnitude and complexity due to the fact that around 60 per cent of the representatives at each level are from weaker sections. By and large, except for the training of zilla parishad members and some training at the panchayat samiti level not much effort has gone into the training of gram panchayat representatives.

This analysis clearly underscores the need for looking into the problem of training from a different perspective. In this connection, it must be clearly borne in mind that the conventional framework of providing panchayat raj training through state training institutions like Administrative Training Institute (ATI), State Institute of Rural Development (SIRD) and Extension Training Centres (ETCs) had serious limitations as their capacity to fulfil this task is very limited. It has to be made clear that out of nearly three million panchayati raj representatives to be trained hardly five per cent has to be trained at the zilla parishad and panchayat samiti level while the rest 95 per cent have to be trained from 2.50 lakh gram panchayats. This calls for a new strategy in terms of administrative arrangements, coordinating mechanisms, funding, course content, location, duration, monitoring and evaluation.

Some statutory provision needs to be made for this purpose. As a matter of fact all state Panchayati Raj Act should make a provision for training. In the absence of this, the training will remain an adhoc and cosmetic exercise, which it has been since last 40 years.

It is suggested that existing educational network should be fully involved in the training of panchayat raj representatives. This calls for a new institutional set-up for the training of panchayat raj representatives. It is necessary for this purpose to set-up Coordination Committee at the divisional/regional, district and block level. The purpose of these committee will be – to identify the educational institutions and the resources persons from administrative and academic community and social workers and to decide the venue of the training programme and provide adequate training infrastructure.

It is a well-known fact that Ministry of Rural Development, Government of India is spending a considerable amount of money in the poverty related programmes. It is suggested that the Government of India, consider earmarking a percentage of the budget for training of panchayat raj representatives. Looking at the magnitude of the task of training at least three-five per cent of the total annual budget of the Ministry of Rural Development must be made available for this purpose.

It is important to emphasise that training is a very important component for making the panchayat raj institutions effective. This not possible without training the representatives and this is all the more important in the context of the fact that a large number of elected representatives at the gram panchayat level are illiterate and semi-literate without any political experience and also are economically poor. Another point which need to be emphasised relate to the fact that panchayati raj institutions basically perform agency functions. However, their role is very critical in the implementation of development programmes and this is not possible till the down-trodden, poor, marginalised and the weaker sections are at least brought to some level of awareness about their roles, responsibilities, procedures, accounting systems and knowledge about the various development programmes. Another aspect which needs to be highlighted relates to the fact that training should not be treated as one time affair. There has to be a continuous process of training in terms of basic orientation and refresher programme, etc., over a period of time.

The research project was conducted by Prof. R.K. Tiwari.

(2) Panchayati Raj and Local Governance: A Comparative Study of Haryana, Madhya Pradesh and Maharashtra

The project explored the extent to which the Panchayati Raj institutions at village level facilitated the involvement of people with local governance. The conceptual focus of the study was on the issues of autonomy, accountability and empowerment and how variations in these accounted for differences in the relationship of PRIs to the extent and quality of local governance in the states of Haryana, Madhya Pradesh and Maharashtra. Thirty villages in three districts of these states formed a basis for inter-state as well as intra-state comparisons. Using a combination of limited participant observation, analysis of official and unofficial documents related to the subject, interactions with officials and local people as well as civil society organisations active in some areas, the study examined the dynamics of power in local contexts. It provides significant insights into the role played by a wide range of factors including the dynamics of caste, gender, political awareness and organisation, economic position, financial resources, political, administrative and civil society participation in shaping the state of local institutions and their bearing on local governance.

Autonomy of local institutions is crucial to any scheme for strengthening local governance. The quality of local governance depends on the pattern of devolution of decision-making and resource raising powers of local institutions. The devolution of powers has been more evident in MP and Maharashtra than in Haryana. Bureaucratic interference, however, continues to be considerable in all three states. While the dependence of Panchayats on administration remains high in all three states, administrative interference is far more evident in Haryana. The recently introduced reforms in MP, aimed at strengthening the position of Gram Sabhas, appear promising but have yet to take off. To the extent Panchayats are able to generate resources locally, their capacity to make a difference improves and here one finds differences across villages within the same district and State also. Some of the sample villages in Maharashtra manage to generate far greater resources than the budget of entire Panchayat Samiti. In MP also, poorer villages are far more dependent on the grants from state government than others, which have used innovative ways of raising local resources. In Haryana, the capacity of Panchayats to generate resources is very limited.

The actual state of empowerment of the people also varies across caste, class and gender lines and requires active engagement of civil society groups as well as state actors. The extent of participation of women has varied with the acceptance of such participation by the community. The situation is changing on account of reservation, yet the change is very slow and requires a lot more support in both Madhya Pradesh and Haryana. The reasons for non-participation of the weak and vulnerable sections are often related to the problems of economic dependence also. Creating conditions for effective participation requires interventions in respect of increasing autonomy, downward accountability and betterment of social and economic conditions in the villages. However, evidence from some villages suggests that greater scope for participation is likely to facilitate transformation of these conditions in course of time.

(3) Some Aspects of Rural Industrialisation in India

As a part of a larger research programme, the following issues were taken up for the present study:

- (a) The place of rural industries in the Indian economy in terms of their size and growth over time, and
- (b) The manner in which the industrial policy resolution/statements regarding rural industries, were given specific shape in the five year plans as time-bound policies and programmes for the rural industries and its critical analysis.

The difficulty in obtaining an appropriate profile of rural industries stems from the hazy or simplistic concept of rural industries. To begin with, the rural industries have been artificially and unscientifically clubbed together with the Small Scale Industries (SSIs). It is true that nearly 90 per cent of the SSIs are tiny and over 40 per cent are located in rural areas. But it has been shown long back (Dhar and Lydal, 1961) that the rural industries are mostly artisanal and unorganised/informal and the SSIs have a large number of qualitative differences in the sense that the SSIs are closer in many respect to the medium and large industries mostly in the corporate sector. Even the Dagli Committee opted for a separate treatment of the two (Dagli Committee, 1979). But adopting a locational view, one comes across some large, a bit too large, units in the rural areas, which have limited linkages in the rural areas. They remain basically enclaves of the organised, non-rural sector. Making use of hitherto unused sources of official statistics for this purpose, generated a profile of rural industries. We also attempt a detailed analysis of the policy perspective on rural artisanal industries spelled out in various five year plans. It is hoped that these two aspects which have not received adequate attention so far may help generate better appreciation of the nature of rural industries in India, including from the stand point of policy formulation.

What are the inferences which can be drawn from the content of the policy profile emerging from the plan documents? Compared to the industrial policy statements, the formulations in the plans may be expected to be closer to operational concerns and programmes. One overriding point our analysis throws up is that the specificity and independent character of rural industries has been missing from the policy profile as it emerges from the planning exercise.

Our policies review shows that most of the policy formulations and suggestions are geared towards supply side factors. They related to making inputs cheaper, more plentiful, making small production more profitable, removing/reducing hurdles blocking investment and production. On the demand side, some marketing support, some measures to improve quality and introduce new, modern designs, etc., are the only ones seen in the plan documents. Reservation of spheres of production is also expected to redirect demand to rural and small enterprises by eliminating large producers. Lately reservations are being withdrawn as almost all the quantitative restrictions on imports have been removed. The fact that reservation policy invites a lot of opposition seems to indicate that this barking which seems to bite. The supply side support, even positive discrimination, is targeted to units of specified sizes, without targeting small entrepreneurs and excluding bigger ones, which turns out to be self-defeating. Thus no distinction is made between enterprise and entrepreneur. Special treatment to small entrepreneur even on the supply side would have released a number of powerful demand side positive impulses as enlarged micro entrepreneurship would lead to creation and diffusion of assured and rising purchasing power, especially in rural and backward areas.

Strengthening of artisanal activities thus can become both demand and supply side, self-reinforcing support. Similarly, on the demand side, little distinction is made between creating and expanding market, and marketing. Most of the traditional, rural informal manufacturing finds that large, organised sector has usurped their market. The need, on the contrary, is to reassign such demand to the small entrepreneurs. Modernisation had developed fairly strong preference for the products of organised manufacturing sector, in many cases, brand loyalty too. The traditional manufacturers, be they weavers, shoe-makers, metal workers, etc., have been displaced from the markets. With small and dwindling markets, their economic strength and capabilities have been sapped and many-sided stagnation had set in. The factual account of the state of rural unorganised manufacturing which we have pieced together from various official surveys and censuses confirms the decline in the number of such Own-Account Manufacturing Enterprises (OAMEs) and employment related to them, and also that the surviving ones have very meager monthly value-added.

(4) Rural Development Programmes and Role of DRDA—A Perceptual and Attitudinal Study of Beneficiaries towards DWCRA

It is widely believed that there is a direct correlation between development of women and development of a nation. Development of women helps in successful implementation of programmes like literacy, education, health and family welfare, nutrition, environment improvement and income generation. Recognising this important aspect, a scheme for Development of Women and Children in Rural Areas (DWCRA) was introduced as sub-scheme of Integrated Rural Development Programme (IRDP) by Government of India.

The DWCRA Scheme in a district is implemented by District Rural Development Agency (DRDA).

The objective of the Study was to find out what role DRDA plays in implementation of Rural Development Programme with special reference to DWCRA and also suggest measures to develop a positive attitude of the beneficiaries towards the scheme. The study was based on 15 DWCRA groups of five Development Blocks of Nagaon district of Assam. The data was collected from the DWCRA groups (each consisting of 10 to 15 members) by administering closed and openended questionnaires.

Major Findings

- The physical growth and development/expansion of DWCRA groups is satisfactory in terms of number of groups, number of villages covered and number of Development Blocks represented. The scheme which started in the year 1987-88 has grown to 739 in number in the year 1998-99 covering 712 villages under 18 Development Blocks.
- The beneficiaries have positive attitude towards the scheme. There is great prospect of this scheme in the Nagaon district of Assam.
- Group formation process was found to be smooth and acceptance level for group leader was very good. There is healthy discussion in Group meetings.
- The economic/income generating activities selected by DWCRA groups were of traditional nature.
- The practice of 'Thrift and Credit' within the group which is a remarkable feature of DWCRA was totally absent.
- Physical infrastructure for working of the DWCRA groups was not satisfactory.

Some Measures for Strengthening DWCRA Scheme

- The Government functionaries and DRDA officials who play a crucial role in supervising and guiding DWCRA groups may hold regular awareness programmes among poor rural women and appraise them about the benefits of DWCRA and also help them in selecting the economic activity of the group.
- Training of women in new skills as well as upgradation of their existing skills must be an integral part of DWCRA.
- The officials should promote marketing of goods produced by DWCRA groups by organising fairs from time to time at state and national level.
- There is need for better cooperation among DRDA and bank officials. The banks need to come forward to participate in the scheme enthusiastically.
- The community level infrastructure will encourage common production which will enhance interaction among members and facilitate other services like child education, adult education, health and nutrition programmes.
- DWCRA group member must be educated about the aims, objectives and benefits of Thrift and Credit.

The study was sponsored by the Department of Panchayat and Rural Development, Government of Assam and undertaken by Prof. Bharati Sharma.

(5) Concurrent Evaluation of Swarna Jayanti Shahari Rojgar Yojana in West Bengal

The study was a part of a four-state evaluation study entrusted to the IIPA by the Ministry of Urban Development and Poverty Alleviation. The objectives and the broad research parameters were laid down by the Ministry. Broadly interpreted, the study was to be an exercise in 'process evaluation', with special focus on community and administrative structures and processes, with an immediate aim of enhancing programme outputs so that, over time, significant reduction in urban poverty is achieved.

The study was conducted in the year 2000 (report submitted in June, 2001). The study therefore, could cover the first three years of the working of SJSRY. Five towns were selected for intensive case studies and about fifty target households were made respondents to a detailed questionnaire in each town. The study covered all the tiers involved in decisions and implementation — viz., the SUDA, the ULBs, Community Organisations, project functionaries, lending and training institutions, etc.

The broad findings of the study indicate that the SJSRY marks an improvement over earlier programmes as it gives greater role to community organisations. Community organisations work well where a supportive politico-administrative milieu exists, where the size of the primary groups are small and homogenous, where adequate flows of 'organisational incentives' are assured and where clear and effective devolution is practised. The study also found that among the various components of SJSRY, vocational training is a surer and more cost effective method of poverty reduction whereas Thrift and Credit Societies, with appropriate support, have the potential for a major economic transformation at the grassroots level through self-reliance, trust and cooperation. The study also made some recommendations for making SJSRY a more effective instrument of urban poverty alleviation. The Ministry has accepted all these recommendations for adoption.

The research project was conducted by Prof. K.S.R.N. Sarma and Shri Pranab Banerji.

(2) Chronic Poverty in India — Phase I

The incidence of income poverty in India has declined steadily between 1973-74 and 1999-2000 but the pace of reduction in poverty has varied considerably. There was a large decline in the percentage of the population in poverty throughout the 1980s, a slowdown in the rate of poverty reduction in the early 1990s, and a reported but contested 10 per cent decline in poverty in the second half of the 1990s. The share of urban poverty increased from 18.7 per cent in 1973-74 to 24.5 per cent in 1987-88 and fluctuated around this since then.

71.65 per cent of India's poor and half the population are located in six states—Uttar Pradesh, Bihar, Madhya Pradesh, Maharashtra, West Bengal and Orissa. Several of these states have suffered long duration chronic poverty as more than 40 per cent of their population has been in poverty for over 20 years.

Rural poverty was severest or the proportion of those who were very poor was largest in South Western Madhya Pradesh, Southern Uttar Pradesh, Southern Orissa, Inland Central Maharashtra, Southern Bihar, Northern Bihar and Central Uttar Pradesh. Urban poverty is specially severe in Inland Central, Eastern and Northern Maharashtra, Southern Uttar Pradesh, Inland Northern Karnataka, South Western and Central Madhya Pradesh and Southern Orissa.

Hunger is a more serious problem in rural India and is especially severe in rural Orissa, West Bengal, Kerala, Assam and Bihar. Non-availability of two square meals a day peaks in the summer months from June to September with longer duration suffering in West Bengal and Orissa. However, hunger exists even in the supposedly better parts of India and policy action is needed to address this.

Casual agricultural labourers were the largest group and cultivators were the second largest among the chronically poor. The bulk of the chronically poor (over 79%) depended on wages. This implies that much of the change in the household income of the chronically poor depended critically on how the wage component changed over the period in question.

Several of the high income poverty states such as Uttar Pradesh, Madhya Pradesh, Bihar, Orissa, and Assam also have the worst record on multidimensionality such as Human Development Index (HDI), Gender Development Index (GDI), Gender Empowerment Measures (GEM), Human Poverty Index (HPI).

Chronic poverty seems to be disproportionately high among historically marginalised groups such as scheduled castes, scheduled tribes, the elderly, women and the disabled. The multiple deprivations suffered by these groups make it harder for them to escape poverty as different forms of disadvantages tend to be mutually reinforcing.

Two regions that can be defined as remote rural areas likely to experience chronic poverty on the basis of agro-ecological and socio-economic conditions are:

- the large tracts of dryland regions; and
- the 'forest based' economies.

The anti-poverty programmes of the Government of India are designed for generation of self-employment, wage employment and provision of safety nets through, for example, food subsidy programmes. Several of these schemes have undergone reforms, rationalisation and better targeting with a greater role to local government for implementation and for beneficiary selection and monitoring. The reforms also lay stress on transparency, making information about the programmes public at the village level, and on the importance of physical, financial, and social audits. In the context of leakages and diversion of funds meant for poverty reduction, it needs to be recognised that state failure or governance failure can be corrected if empowered communities are willing to put in the time and effort needed to demand transparency and accountability.

The consultancy assignment was conducted by Prof. Aasha Kapur Mehta..

(3) Study on Protected Area Management in the Andamans

The objective of the consultancy assignment was to prepare a report, in collaboration with the Andaman and Nicobar (AFN) Islands Environmental Team (ANET), on the problems and prospects of the wildlife protected areas in the A&N Islands. The report was then to be discussed and finalised in a workshop organised for the purpose in Port Blair, A&N Islands.

Accordingly, a report was prepared and a workshop held in July, 2001.

The major findings included:

1. The A&N Islands are among the richest areas in the country in terms of biodiversity.
2. They have a protected area network of more than 100 national parks and sanctuaries.
3. However, many of these protected areas are seriously threatened by various commercial and other activities.
4. Among the major threats faced by the PA network are:
  - (a) Extraction of sand, from the beaches, for use in construction work. This, apart from destroying the coastal ecosystem, also adversely impacts on the nesting sites of turtles.
  - (b) Excessive and inappropriate tourist activities.
  - (c) Exploitation of commercially valuable species, especially sea cucumbers, sharks, lobsters, etc.

- (d) Exploitation of swiftlet nests.
  - (e) Poaching, both by local residents and by poaches from Myanmar, especially of valuable timber and commercially valuable wildlife species.
  - (f) Adverse impact of introduced species such as the spotted deer, feral dogs and cats, and feral elephants.
  - (g) Pollution due to municipal activities and from passing ships.
  - (h) Destruction of corals for commercial use and for construction raw material.
  - (i) Destruction of mangroves for fuelwood.
  - (j) Over-fishing in some areas.
5. Detailed recommendations for many of the protected areas were formulated and handed over to the UT government and the Government of India.
  6. The final report is under publication, along with a CD, which would contain an electronic archive of important documents dealing with the A&N Islands.

The consultancy assignment was carried out by Shri Shekhar Singh.

Shri Hukum Deo Narayan Yadav, Union Minister of State for Agriculture, inaugurated the conference and Shri Balasaheb Vikhe Patil, Union Minister of State for Finance, presided.

In his address, Shri M.C. Gupta, Director IIPA, focused on the mounting disaster losses throughout the world, which no country can bear on their own and thus stressed the need for risk transfer over different countries through insurance and re-insurance.

Earlier, welcoming the participants, Shri Anil Sinha observed that the last few years were extremely difficult for India due to number of high casualty disasters which again required networking between disaster managers, insurance agencies and affected population. Shri S.K. Purkayastha, Additional Secretary in the Ministry of Finance (Banking and Insurance Division), Shri Naved Masood, Joint Secretary (NDM Division) also spoke. Other noted speakers were Mr. Karl Wittmann of Munich Re-Insurance, Shri Haresh Shah of Stanford University, and Prof. A.S. Arya.

The main objective of the conference was to examine the interface between disaster management and insurance, and to assess the whole reaction chain from hazard and vulnerability up to mechanisms of risk prevention and financing.

A cross-section of experts working in the field including senior Central/state government officers, national and international NGOs, insurance agencies, media, academics and management personnel attended the programme.

Following are the recommendations made in the conference: (i) Need for role of government, insurance/re-insurance sector and consumers. (ii) Need for common language through which leaders in technology, government and financial institutions can exchange ideas and arrive at solutions. (iii) Need for a review of available insurance regulations and products around the world and their weaknesses and strengths. (iv) Need to assess the viability of including catastrophe insurance at par with general insurance. (v) Need to examine the feasibility of including the poorer and therefore more vulnerable sections of the society. (vi) To collect, compile and analyse geo-physical data related to earth quakes in some major cities in India.

Delivering the key-note address Shri Anil Sinha mentioned that the basic reasons behind the disasters include the large number of population living in unauthorized non-engineered dwelling units, ill-planned or unplanned development projects and the ineffective policy initiatives and implementations. He observed that due to these factors, inter-alia disasters cause high fatalities and decline in standards of living through hopelessness, health hazards, malnutrition, loss of jobs and migration. According to Shri Sinha, while it is not possible to prevent natural disasters from occurring, with the application of science and technology, we can evolve mitigation measures to reduce the impact and minimise the loss of lives and properties. He mentioned that preparedness measures such as training of role players including the community, development of advanced forecasting systems, effective communications, and above all a sound and well networked institutional structure involving the government organisations, academic and research institutions, armed forces and the non-governmental organisations have greatly contributed to the overall disaster management in the country.

The Conference was attended by 268 members.
